INTRODUCTION

For this reason they may not have access to information, care, and support that would enable them to stay healthy and avoid infection with the Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV), the virus that can cause AIDS. They may also be vulnerable to other sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) and illnesses. These young people have questions and may be concerned about their sexuality and sexual health.

WHY A RESOURCE PACK?

This manual is called a resource pack because it contains lists of resources and contacts that can help youth workers and educators network with each other and discuss sexual health and AIDS with young people as well as share experiences with others working in the same areas. It is designed to:

- offer ideas about how to include activities on sexual health and AIDS in existing youth programmes
- share information about existing resources such as games, posters, videos, comics, and training materials
- suggest ways that these resources can be modified and adapted to suit specific needs
- provide some actual examples of games and activities that can be adapted and used to help young people make healthier and safer choices
- encourage networking and information sharing among groups who are working with socially apart youth

SHARE YOUR IDEAS AND YOUR WORK

The idea to produce this resource pack came from people who are working directly with socially apart youth. They shared information about their activities and the materials they are using.

Please use the pull out questionnaire in the center pages of the pack to tell us about your work and become involved in the Hand-In-Hand Network. You can use the evaluation form also in the center pages to let us know what you liked or disliked about the resource pack so that we may improve the quality of possible future editions.

Please tell others about the resource pack and the Hand-In-Hand Network.

HEALTH FOR US ALL

INCLUDING HEALTH IN EXISTING PROGRAMMES FOR YOUTH

orking with socially apart youth can be very overwhelming. They have many urgent needs such as safe shelter, food, clothing or protection against violence. Defending their health is also essential. But you may feel that taking on the issue of health is more than you and your project can handle, and the children themselves may not identify health as a primary concern.

Yet what happens if large numbers of the young people you are working with become sick with diseases such as cholera or AIDS? How will you cope with the cost of care and treatment, especially when health services are often unable to deal with increasing demands? Your project may succeed in saving a child from starvation and violence, but these successes will seem meaningless if that child remains vulnerable to other life-threatening illnesses. Preventive health should therefore be an integral part of any youth programme.

WHERE TO BEGIN

If your organisation has never worked on health issues before, start by getting information on the most urgent health problems in your area. Contact the local health office or clinic and find out what health problems affect the people in your community. Talk with your co-workers and the young people you work with to learn about the health issues most affecting them. Try not to start with a fixed idea of what the major health problems are. With an open mind you can often discover important problems which may not be obvious to outsiders.

When you have identified some priorities, choose one and begin by learning about the problem. If it is cholera, for example, find out the ways it can be prevented and treated. Look for training materials that can prepare everyone in the project to discuss the problem of cholera. Check if there are materials that can be adapted for use directly with your group, such as comic book stories or posters. Make sure that the prevention measures and treatments suggested in the materials are appropriate by discussing the information with the children. For example, pictures showing indoor flushing toilets and running water would not be useful if they are not available to the young people you are working with.

SEXUAL HEALTH AND AIDS

People often avoid talking about sexual health issues and AIDS because they feel embarrassed to talk about sex. Young people in particular may feel uncomfortable discussing sex. However, because many youth are vulnerable to sexually transmitted diseases including AIDS, we should overcome our reluctance to discuss sex and sexuality and motivate young people to look for advice and support.

It is important to make sure that you and your co-workers are comfortable with the topic of sexual health and AIDS before beginning to discuss it with others. Some training may be useful. Consult health workers in your community for possible sources of training on the topic, or consider using some of the training materials listed in the resources section of this resource pack for ideas. Try to get in touch with professionals or other organisations working in the areas you want to focus on.

Become familiar with the range of issues and means of prevention before you start working with others. If you plan to mention condoms as a way of preventing pregnancy or STDs and AIDS, make sure you know how to use them correctly, and be prepared to demonstrate this. Organise open talks among your group to discuss feelings and concerns around the different topics.

Including health as a regular part of youth programmes does not require the creation of a special project or taking on new workers. Many of the games and activities in the resources section of this pack can easily be included along with your existing activities and can be fun to use. They may even provide an opportunity to expand your understanding of the young people with whom you are working and facilitate an interactive and richer communication with them.

SELECTING AND ADAPTING RESOURCES

here are many existing resources that we can look at for ideas on how to discuss and inform young people about AIDS and sexual health. Many groups may lack the money or experience to develop new materials by themselves, so it is useful to see what others have already produced. You may then decide that some of these resources can be adapted to meet the specific needs of the group we are trying to reach.

In order to be effective, it will be necessary to adapt most games, comics, posters, videos and training manuals. Materials listed in the resources section of this pack, for example, were all designed for use with a particular group and with a certain set of messages. It is unlikely that you will find resources that exactly meet the needs of your group, or that take into account the cultural aspects that are unique to your situation. So here are some ideas to help you think about the process of adaptation.

DEFINE THE GROUP

Your project may work with several different groups of young people, so plan to look at different resources and teaching strategies depending on the group. For example, young people who have been sexually exploited or involved in sex work would need a certain type of information different from younger children who are not yet sexually active. Think about:

- Group size. Do you plan to work with large or small groups or individuals?
- Who is in the group? Are you trying to involve children directly, or will you work with teachers, trainers, and street educators?
- What is the age, gender, reading ability and level of social skills of your group? Would you use the materials differently with different groups?

Clearly defining the group will make it easier to select and adapt appropriate resources.

ASSESS THEIR UNDERSTANDING

Find out what the group already know about the problem: Listen to their concerns and encourage them to discuss their feelings. In this way you can find out what they may not understand or have difficulty in dealing with. You can then consider which resources can best respond to the specific needs you assessed.

One difficultly is that subjects such as AIDS and sexual health are very personal and responses may be specific to a particular cultural setting. Issues are raised that need to be handled sensitively. So the best way to adapt resources is to define the problem and to search for an adequate way to relay the information with the people in your project and the active participation of the boys and girls.

SELECTING RESOURCES

Lists of resources may not tell you everything you need to know about the content. But there are basic themes in AIDS education: sexuality, anger and violence, risk taking, prejudices, discrimination, dealing with crises and emotions, use of drugs, pregnancy and contraception. What are the issues that you identified as most important for your project now? Which subjects do you find more difficult to tackle in your work? What are the gaps in your education programme? What are the most common doubts young people express? What are they most worried about? Asking these questions can help to narrow down the choices.

Don't be influenced by where the resources come from and assume that the best will come from developed countries. More sophisticated material may look good and have good promotion, but it doesn't necessarily get the message across to your group. The best resources are often those that have been developed with the children themselves, by workers with direct access to them, and those that have been pre and post tested with similar groups.

Be sure that the resources are available in languages that you or your staff can understand or at least can have translated. If it is a video, check to make sure that you can obtain a copy in the video format of your country IVHS or BETA in either NTSC, SECAM, or PAL) unless you have a multi-standard video player.

It is also important to think about the types of resources you select. Do you have a video player and room to show videos, or would it be better to make a play or puppet show around the same issue? Where could you place posters, or would small stickers make a bigger impact?

Check with other groups, especially those with a resource centre, to see if they might have locally produced materials or already have those from other places. Ask them about their experiences with the material and find out if you can see a copy. This can help you save time and money by avoiding things that are not appropriate or duplicating existing information.

Even though there are many free and low cost resources, it is sometimes necessary to pay for postage. Decide how much your group can afford to spend. Remember to allow enough time for materials to arrive. It can sometimes take several weeks.

WHEN THE RESOURCES HAVE ARRIVED

Spend time looking at them and discussing them with your co-workers. Be bold about rejecting anything that is totally unsuitable, even if this seems like a waste of money. Using inadequate resources is even more of a waste. Sometimes it is possible to review more expensive resources like videos and manuals before you have to pay. Ask the distributor of expensive materials for this option when you request the copy. Return the ones that are not appropriate.

Whether the resources are games and group activities, manuals, comics, videos or films, you should decide whether they seem to match the needs of your group. Check to see if the main messages from the material seem to answer the questions of your group. Remember who it is you want to use this material with.

TEST THE MATERIAL

If you have reviewed the material and it seems as if it may be useful, you are ready to try it with a small number of people from your group. Select a place that is safe and free from distractions. Choose a time when the group will not be tired or hungry, perhaps after a snack or meal. Ask the group to sit in a circle on chairs or comfortable cushions.

Ask them for some basic information about the topic you have chosen. Observe the reactions of the group when they are using the resource. Take notes of things that they say When they have finished, ask them what they thought about the resource. Find out what was confusing for them. Discover what they liked and disliked about the resource. Ask them the same questions you asked them in the beginning to find out if the messages from the material helped to improve their understanding of the topic.

If it is a video, consider showing parts of it as a way of stimulating discussion and activity. Freeze the images that you feel are controversial and ask for reactions. Find out how the group feels it is different and how it is the same in terms of action, language, and situations.

With this information your group is now ready to decide whether to use the resources, themselves by adapting them to your situation, just use the ideas in the materials to make your own resources, or add some guidelines to better explore the issue.

ADAPTING

Even if the video, game or comic seems like it has been made for a group exactly the same as yours, adapting it so that it is truly interactive may be the best way of teaching and learning. People remember things that involve them.

Unless you have a large budget to make your own video, and are sure that you may use it frequently, you will need to consider other options. Perhaps the group could act the story as a dramatic play or with puppets. Or you may even decide to write guidelines that suggests some issues to discuss when showing the video. The same ideas apply with comics. You can either think about how to draw it differently, or just use different words in the "bubbles". Individuals and groups can work on parts of this, putting together a final comic strip for further discussion and maybe even presenting to others. You may also use pictures from magazines to develop your own comics, posters or games.

ASK SOME MORE QUESTIONS

You can see that using existing materials interactively may lead you into creating your own. If you decide to do this, you can step back and ask a few more questions:

- What are the relevant ideas for the group in this resource?
- What should be kept, cut, or added?
- What issues do you want to include in your video, game or comic?
- How can you make these points in different ways?
- What people and situations should be used?
- What words make sense?
- Would you use the words used by these group, or would they trust the information more if the words were those used by a doctor or a health worker?

SOME USEFUL TIPS

Use the human resources you have - everyone has some skill to give the group. Make sure each child or teenager has a role that reflects, and even stretches, their abilities.

If you use professional or volunteer help from a designer or film-maker make sure this person gets involved in all stages of the group activity. Don't take away the group's ideas for someone outside to process.

Consider inviting a person with experience in the area of AIDS and sexual health to get their opinion. Discuss with them the different issues that have emerged. Maybe they know examples of what has worked well elsewhere, or mistakes that might be avoided.

You don't have to produce something sophisticated, just something usable. Once you have your new resource, test it on other groups, incorporate their comments, and share it with other projects, including the Hand-in-Hand Network!

EXAMPLE OF ADAPTING A RESOURCE

Define the Problem

Some young girls involved in your project have very little knowledge about AIDS and how it is transmitted. After some discussion you discover that some of them are sexually active, but they do not seem to know how to protect themselves. Ask them three basic questions about AIDS and keep their answers: 1) What is AIDS? 2) How do you get it? 3) How can you protect yourself?

Select Possible Resources

Your project works in a rural area, so you decide to use resources that are easy to transport and do not require a supply of electricity. The girls like to play games, so you decide to try using the memory game you saw in the resource pack.

Use the Resources

You and a co-worker invite six young girls to play with the game at a quiet area near the village. They have just eaten a lunch you provided so they are not hungry. After a brief explanation about how to use the game, you keep silent and observe the girls playing.

Discuss the Reactions

It seems that the girls were confused by some of the pictures on the memory cards, so you ask them about this. They do not understand the meaning of the card which shows a syringe. People do not inject themselves in this region. Only the local nurse uses these needles. You ask more questions and your co-worker writes down feedback from the girls. Ask them the same three questions you have asked them before. Compare the results to check if they are better informed.

Make Changes

The girls said they liked playing the game, and you could see that they asked many questions about the pictures which enabled you to explain more about AIDS. But some of the pictures were confusing. So you decide to reduce the number of cards in the game, excluding the ones that showed injecting drugs because this is not practised in your area. It also seemed that cards showing condom use did not provide enough information, so you decide to have a separate talk about this with the girls, using some illustrations you found from a brochure.

Try the New Version

A different group of six young girls are invited to try the new version of the game. You follow the same procedure of explaining how to play, ask the same questions, and then observe the girls. When they have finished you show them the other illustrations from the brochure about using condoms, and this seems to make things clearer for them. At the end you repeat the same questions. Your co-worker who has observed both groups of girls using the game and recorded the results agrees with you that the new version is now ready to be used with other young girls in the community.

his section contains a selection of more than 130 resources. These are distributed by some of the groups listed in the contacts and networking section of the resource pack.

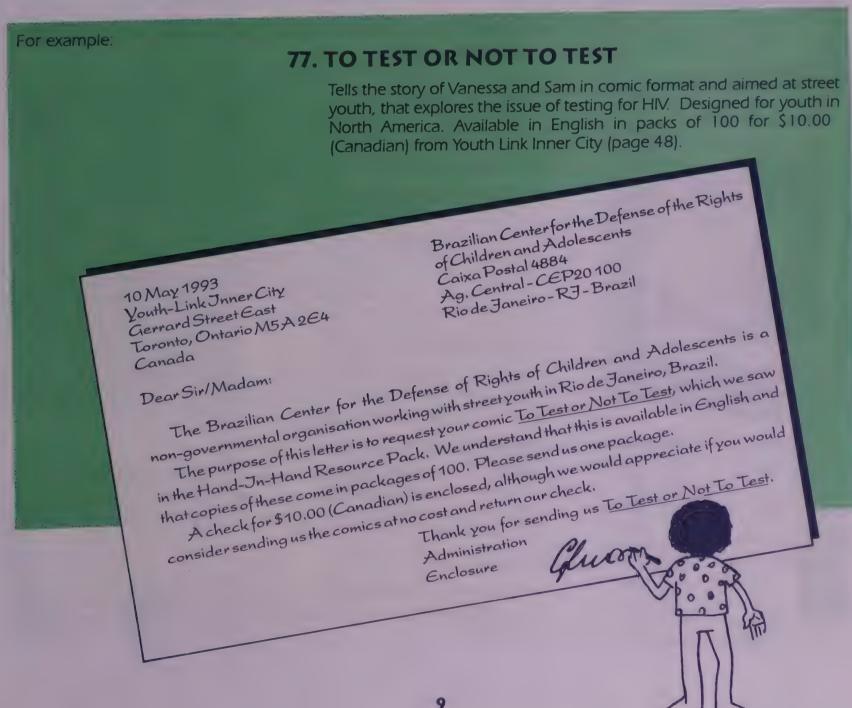

There are many more resources dealing with sexual health and AIDS for socially apart youth than we had space or updated information to list here. If you know about other resources or your group has developed some of your own, please share them with the Hand-In-Hand Network by returning the questionnaire in the resource pack.

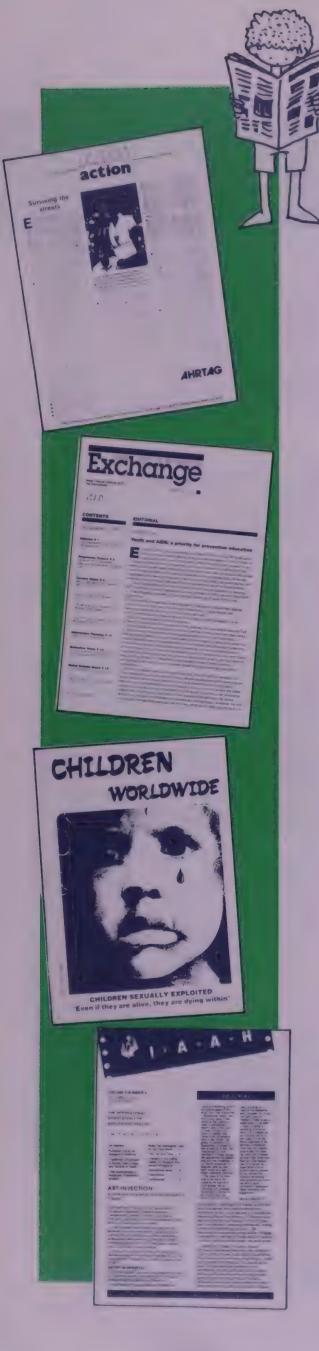

The resources in this section are organised into these categories:

Newsletters • Training Materials and Manuals • Games • Posters • Comics • Videos • Books and Articles

Each resource has a number next to it that refers to the index on page 64 of the resource pack. Where possible we have tried to include a brief description of each resource with information about the cost and languages in which it is available.

The group that distributes the resource is listed at the end of each description, with the page number where the full address of this group can be found in the contacts and networking section of the resource pack.

NEWSLETTERS

1. AIDS ACTION

Provides practical information on a wide range of AIDS care and prevention issues. Mainly aimed at health and community workers and educators. Includes case studies, resource listings, and covers a particular theme with each quarterly issue. Special issue on street youth produced in August 1990 (issue 11). In addition to the English language edition, regional editions are produced with partner organisations in Spanish, French, and Portuguese (African and Brazilian). TRAINING MATERIALS AND MANUALS

21. ABOUT THE SEXUAL ABUSE OF CHILDREN

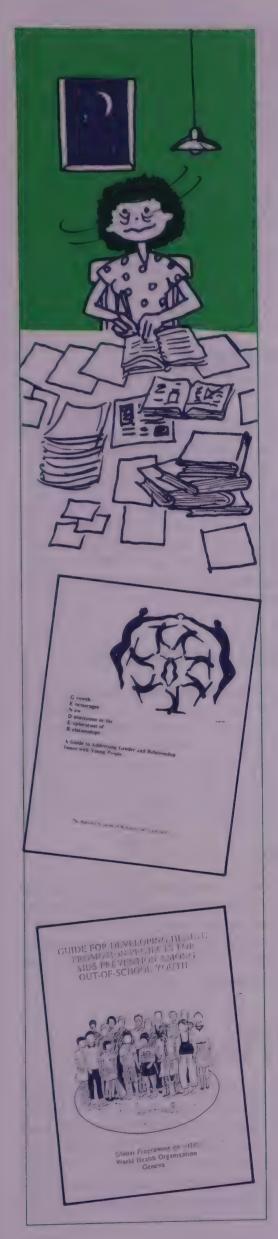

This 15 page illustrated booklet contains practical information about sexual child abuse and suggestions for teaching children how to protect themselves. Targeting mainly parents and youth workers in the United Kingdom. Produced in 1989. Available in English for £43.00 sterling plus postage (pack of 50) from Scriptographic Publications Ltd (page 61).

22. ACTION FOR YOUTH

A training manual on AIDS written in 1990 for youth workers who work with young people in their mid-teens and older (the publishers urge careful review and adaptation recommended before using the pack with children under 15). The pack has been designed to provide information about the prevention of HIV and help youth workers deal with their own worries and concerns about AIDS. Suggests methods for planning and evaluating an AIDS health promotion programme for youth groups, and includes possible activities that could be used with young people to help them make healthier and safer life choices. Produced by the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies and the World Organisation of the Scout Movement, and available in English, Spanish, French and Arabic for Swiss Francs 20.00 from the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies (page 58).

23. AIDS AND DEVELOPMENT

An information pack produced to explore AIDS in the context of development, including its social and economic impact on communities in developing countries. Contains a useful overview and list of resources. Available in English for £1.00 sterling from CAFOD (page 60).

24. AIDS: TRADING FEARS FOR FACTS

This guide for use by young people between the ages of 13-18 contains straightforward information about AIDS in a resource book filled with illustrations, comic-book art, and photographs. Covers sex, condom use, HIV testing, and drug use primarily within a North American context, but could be adapted. Cost is US$3. 95 per book, plus US$3.00 for postage (no postage charge if more than three books are ordered) from Consumer Reports Books (page 52).

25. CHILD-TO-CHILD: A RESOURCE BOOK

Contains many of the most important Child-to-Child publications dealing with primary health care from recent years, including 31 activity sheets which are also available in a separate pack for £3.20 sterling. Specific activity sheets cover AIDS and children who live and work on the street. An introductory section discusses ways the book has been used in different countries. Suggestions for adapting materials are provided. Another section describes approaches to learning and teaching, including details about the Child-to-Child methodology with many examples. Other sections deal with practical advice on how to plan and organise evaluation, or how to run a workshop. Published in 1992 and available in many languages including Arabic, Chinese, French, Gujarati, Hindi, Indonesian, Portuguese, Sesotho, Spanish, Swahili, and Telugu. Child-to-Child is willing to assist in arranging translation into other languages. Cost is £8.00 sterling (includes 60% for international airmail postage) from TALC (page 61).

26. EDUCATOR'S GUIDE TO AIDS AND OTHER STDS

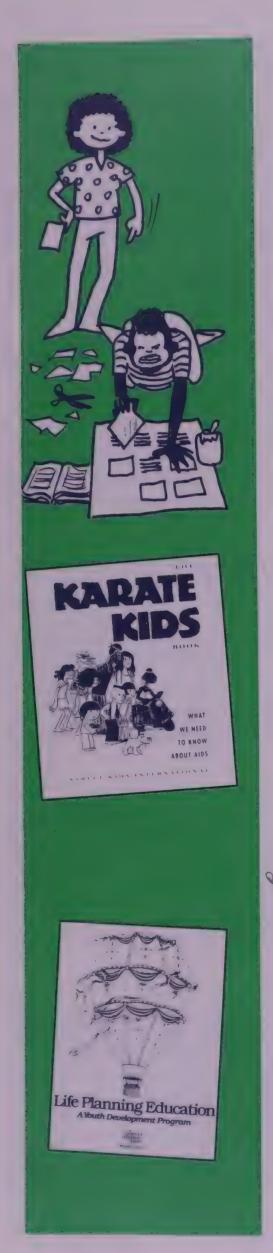

This 100 page guide has a comprehensive STD curriculum with a full section on AIDS. Detailed information about STDs with exercises and lessons. Aimed at young people in school in North America. Published in 1989. Available in English and Spanish from Health Education Consultants (page 52).

27. GENDER: A GUIDE TO ADDRESSING GENDER AND RELATIONSHIP ISSUES WITH YOUNG PEOPLE

Provides ideas, exercises, and workshop models to address gender and relationship issues for young people. Designed to be used by organisations wishing to address gender issues in the course of their existing work with young people. Step-by-step guidelines and activities included. Published in 1992. Available in English for US$12.00 from the National Network of Runaway and Youth Services (page 53).

28. GUIDE FOR DEVELOPING HEALTH PROMOTION PROJECTS FOR AIDS PREVENTION AMONG OUT-OF-SCHOOL YOUTH

To be published by the World Health Organisation (expected release in late 1993), this guide aims to help those involved in planning and designing health promotion projects for the prevention of HIV and STDs among out-of-school youth. Describes the process of project planning and development, including defining project goals and targets, conducting assessment of the situation, selecting communication strategies, project implementation, management, monitoring and evaluation. It also includes examples of projects and activities from various countries. Contact WHO, Global Programme on AIDS, Youth and General Public Unit (page 59).

29. GUIDE TO IMPLEMENTING TAP: TEENS FOR AIDS PREVENTION PROJECT

A step-by-step guide to developing and implementing a peer education programme on AIDS prevention in schools. Aimed at young people in North America, the manual contains ideas for training, evaluation, and working with the media. 145 pages published in 1990. Available in English from Center for Population Options (page 52).

30. GUIDE TO PLANNING HEALTH PROMOTION FOR AIDS PREVENTION AND CONTROL

Part of a series on AIDS (no. 5) published by the World Health Organisation, this 70-page booklet contains useful guidelines and suggestions for planning AIDS prevention activities. Published in 1989. Available in English for Swiss Francs 14.00 (Swiss Francs 9.80 for géveloping countries) by contacting WHO (page 59).

31. HELPING CHILDREN IN DIFFICULT CIRCUMSTANCES: A TEACHER'S MANUAL

This 46 page manual published in 1991 is designed to convey useful knowledge to teachers about the effects of violence, war and social conflicts on a child's development and feelings. Highlights the importance of the relationship between teacher and student, and suggests means of support that can be used in the school, family, and community to help students with different kinds of difficulty. Case studies from Mozambique are featured, and the manual provides a step-by-step guide on how to support children who have been affected by their experiences of violence. SCF plans to produce future manuals which will deal with communicating with children and children and war. Available for £2. 95 sterling in English and Portuguese from Save the Children Fund UK (page 61).

32. KARATE KIDS BOOK: WHAT WE NEED TO KNOW ABOUT AIDS

Developed for use with the Karate Kids mixed-media package (see videos), this training manual can also be used on its own. It is written in accessible language with illustrations, and provides a reference guide for talking about HIV/AIDS. Published in 1990. Available in 8 languages: Spanish, Portuguese, English, French, Tahi, Kiswahili, Hindi, and Tagalog. Cost is US$3.00 from Street Kids International (page 47). Available free or charge in Brazil in Portuguese from the Brazilian Center for the Defense of Rights of Children and Adolescents (page 44).

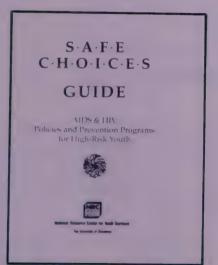

33. LET'S TEACH ABOUT AIDS

A series of six practical booklets developed in southern Africa for use by AIDS educators describing participatory learning exercises that can be used with adults and young people. Practical activities and ideas cover a range of issues, including how to use visual aids, drama, and evaluation techniques. Series includes a poster entitled How to use a Picture Code for problem solving in AIDS Education. Published in 1991-1992. Available free in English from AHRTAG (page 60).

34. LIFE PLANNING EDUCATION: A YOUTH DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

A manual aimed primarily at youth in North America outlining a programme focusing on two tasks: 1) preparing young people for work; and 2) dealing with sexual and reproductive development, feelings, and behaviours. Introductory section for group leaders discusses teaching techniques and strategies for implementing the programme. Another section suggests activities designed to actively involve youth in the learning process. Recommended resources and further reading are included.

Published in 1985. Cost is US$44. 95 plus 20% for postage and US$34. 95 for Spanish or Portuguese editions. Available from the Center for Population Options (page 52). In Portuguese also from Sociedade Civil Bem-Estar Familiar no Brasil, BEMFAM, (page 46).

35. MANUAL DE CAPACITACION PARA PROMOTOR

A 450 page training manual on health promotion aimed at young people aged 15-22. Includes practical information on sexuality, anatomy, young women and menstruation, puberty, pregnancy and family planning, AIDS, cancer, abortion, rape, self esteem, and drugs. Published in 1992. Available in Spanish from Centro para los Adolecentes de San Miguel de Allende (page 50).

36. ON-LINE: THE DRUGS LEARNING PACK

A 108 page pack of training activities and information for training people who work with young people in the area of drug misuse. Published in 1992. Available for US$3.00 in English from Childhope — USA (page 52).

123. SEXUALITY OF STREET YOUTH

An article examining the sexuality and sexual practices of street youth in Brazil. Written by Ana Filgueiras and printed in the ABIA boletim 16 (1992). Available in Portuguese from ABIA (page 44) and in English from the Centre International de l'Enfance in a publication called Adolescent Sexual and Reproductive Health (page 56).

124. THE STREET CHILDREN OF HILLBROW (MALUNDE)

Reviews the situation of street youth in Hillbrow, South Africa. Published in 1990. Available in English from the Witwatersrand University Press (page 41).

125. STREET CHILDREN: PROBLEMS OR PERSONS?

An overview of issues affecting street youth in a brief 23 page booklet. Designed as an introductory publication for a varied audience. Published in 1992. Available free in English and French through ICCB (page 58).

126. STREET KIDS IN BRAZIL: AN EXPLORATORY STUDY OF MEDICAL STATUS, HEALTH KNOWLEDGE AND THE SELF

Published in 1989 and written by Walter Oliveira, this report recommends a model for intervention following an in-depth review of the status of the health of street youth in Brazil. Contains detailed analysis of data on broad ranging factors affecting street youth. Available in English only for reference purposes at the Brazilian Centre for the Defense of Rights of Children and Adolescents (page 44).

127. STREET YOUTH: ADAPTATION AND SURVIVAL IN THE AIDS DECADE

A 4 page article appearing in Journal of Adolescent Health in 1991, it describes the critical relationship for street youth between survival strategies and the AIDS pandemic. Reprints in English from Mount Zion Hospital and Medical Center (page 53).

128. STREET YOUTH AND AIDS

This 4 page paper was published by UNICEF and describes the support initiatives in the area of health and AIDS for street youth. It includes a brief report from the 2nd International Conference on Street Youth held in Brazil in 1992, and lists a few resources. Published in 1992 and available in English from UNICEF (page 54).

129. STREET YOUTH AND AIDS — CANADIAN STUDY

A report presenting the findings of a study of street youth in Canada and how they are responding to AIDS. Designed to influence Canadian policy makers and provide information to health workers, it contains information about the attitudes, knowledge and behaviours of street youth in Canada. May have useful insights into the problems facing street youth elsewhere. Published in 1989. Available free in English and French from the Canadian Public Health Association (page 46).

130. SURVIVORS

Part of UNICEF's occasional publications series (expected publication at the end of 1993), this report looks at the health of street children and youth around the world and suggests possible actions. It was produced with the participation of many organisations working with street youth. Available in English from UNICEF (page 54).

131. THE SEXUAL EXPLOITATION OF CHILDREN: FIELD RESPONSES

A book containing case studies of various projects working with street youth. Published in 1991. Available in English and French for Swiss Francs 25.00 from ICCB (page 58).

132. TOO MUCH TIME: TOO LITTLE MONEY

This 50 page book looks at the challenge of urban street youth in Papua New Guinea, and suggests some ways to give young people alternatives to street life. Published in 1992 and written by Mark Connolly and Peter Dalglish. Available in English for US$5.00 (includes shipping) from Street Kids International (page 47).

133. THE URBAN CHILD IN DIFFICULT CIRCUMSTANCES

A UNICEF publication series featuring case studies from Brazil, India, Kenya, Italy, and the Philippines. Available in English from UNICEF International Child Development Centre (page 57).

SAMPLES

This puzzle can be copied, enlarged and played by young people. As they assemble the puzzle you can discuss the information on each piece and how it relates to their lives.

Try creating your own puzzle pieces as well as the written messages with information about AIDS or risk tactors that you would like to discuss with your group. You might also try to find pictures from magazines that illustrate the written messages for the pieces of the puzzle and place them on the back. This will make the game more interesting to look at and make it easier for children who do not read to use it.

Factors which may lead to HIV infection in a young person

2. MEMORY GAME

Reprinted with permission from the Brazilian Center for the Defense of Rights of Children and Adolescents (contacts section page 44).

This game was produced through a process of discussions with street youth. The street educators and the street youth determined that it was necessary to clearly show how HIV is, and is not, transmitted. They then worked with an artist to produce images on cards to explain these messages. You will need two copies of each card to play.

With these cards young people can play the memory game. The rules for this game are:

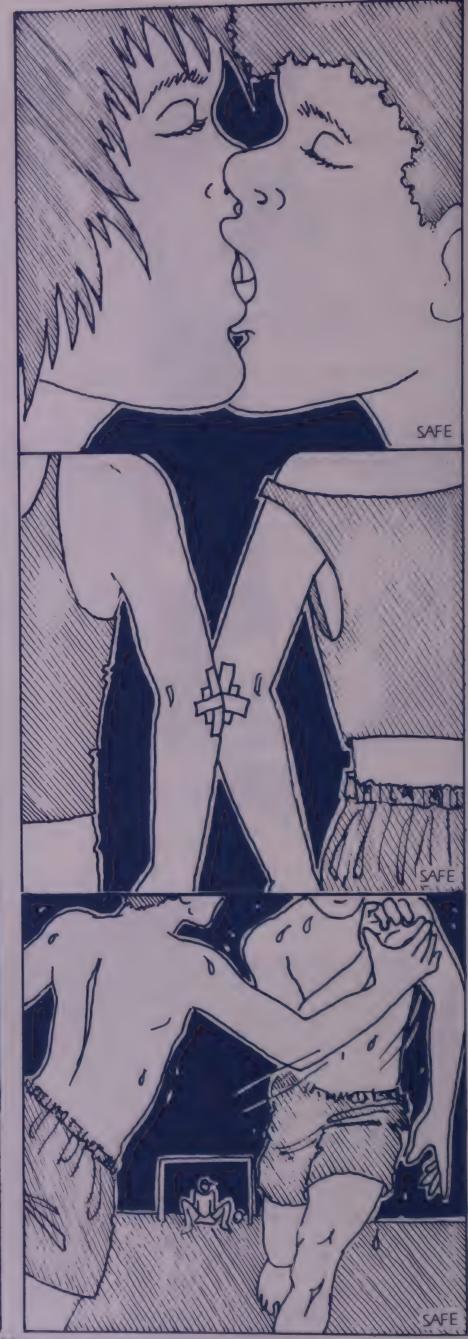

- 1. Start by placing all the cards in rows on any flat surface with the images facing down.
- 2. The first player turns one card over, leaving it in the same place in the row. Then this same player turns over a second card, leaving it also in the same place.
- 3. If the images on these two cards match, the player must answer whether and why the activity shown on this set of cards is "safe" (such as sharing food) or "unsafe" (such as having sex without a condom).
- 4. If the answer was correct (as clarified by the educator), then the player may pick up the set of cards and turn over another two cards. But if the answer was wrong, the cards are turned back over and the next player has a chance to try and find two matching cards.
- 5. The game is finished when all the cards have been correctly matched and the right answer has been given about whether the activity shown on the set of cards is "safe" or "unsafe. " The player with the most cards at the end of the game wins. You might consider giving the winner a prize, such as an extra condom!

We have reprinted the cards from this game in the Resource Pack so that you can copy them and use them directly, adapt them, or use them as an idea to produce your own.

An initiative of the Brazilian Centre of Defense of the Rights of Children and Adolescents with the support of Appropriate Health Resources & Technologies Action Group (AHRTAG), the World Health Organization/Global Programme on AIDS, and the Ashoka Foundation.

3. SNAKES AND LADDERS

Reprinted with permission from Child-to-Child (contacts section, page 60).

Players use dice and move pieces around this board game. If a player's piece lands on a box with a question, it must be correctly answered before they can roll the dice again. When pieces land on a ladder the player can move their piece to the box at the end, as long as they answer the question correctly. But if a piece lands on a snake it must be moved back to the box at the other end. The first player to reach the end wins.

Think about what questions you might place on the board. What questions could you ask that would explain information about sexual health or AIDS?

4. CARD ACTIVITY

The rules for playing this game are reprinted. What questions could you place on the cards? How could you adapt this activity for use with your group?

The card game

This exercise uses a set of statement cards which allow participants to share information among themselves and then clarify what they know and do not know.

Prepare beforehand a set of statement cards, sufficient for each person to have one.

Suggestions for Statement Cards

Select the situations which are most appropriate for your group, and/or devise your own cards and add them to the pack.

Deep kissing Having lots of different sexual partners Injecting drugs for the first time Vaginal sex if you are on the pill Oral sex Having sex with your husband Having a blood transfusion Swimming in a public pool Having your ears pierced Heavy petting Getting a love bite Anal sex using a condom Being tattooed Having casual sex abroad Caring for someone with AIDS Oral sex using a condom Helping someone who's having a nosebleed

Make a line on the floor. Label one end high risk, the other end no risk and appropriately in between low risk. Place the don't know card separately.

High Risk Low Risk No Risk Don't Know

Have the group sitting in a circle, and give out a card between two people (or four if you have a large group). Find out whether people would prefer to go into same sex pairs.

Explain that in all cases the risk assumes that the activity involves an infected person. Ask the pairs to discuss where they think the card should go.

Unmasking AIDS

5. T-SHIRTS WITH COMIC STRIPS

Reprinted with permission from the Brazilian Centre for the Defense of Rights of Children and Adolescents (contacts section page 44) and Sociedade Civil Bem-Estar Familiar no Brasil (page 46).

The comics printed on these t-shirts were produced by a group of street youth. They show images of safe behaviours in the context of the daily lives of the street youth.

Using comics to convey information can be useful for groups who do not read. Also, many young people like to look at comics so they attract attention and help to get the message across. Comics also encourage interactive communication because children may ask what they mean, opening a discussion.

Printing the comics on a t-shift has the advantage of being with the children while they are wearing them. T-shirts with comics also last longer than a comic printed in a book or on poster.

The comic stories in these two examples were developed after discussions with a group of street youth where it was decided that it was necessary to explain the following:

- that it is not possible for boys to become infected with HIV by masturbating together in a group
- using a condom correctly during sex can prevent HIV transmission

With the help of an artist, the group developed these two stories:

Story One:

A street youth runs from a policeman who wants to beat him. He passes in front of a cinema showing pornographic films and then imagines himself having sex with the movie star. He is excited by this idea and so he joins his peers to engage in a competition to see who can ejaculate first (a common game among young boys).

A street youth runs from a policeman who wants to beat him. Finally safe, he meets a young girl and falls in love. He imagines having sex with her and remembers that the street educator recommended using condoms.

In both stories the children created the slogan "A smart guy that is a smart guy doesn't get AIDS.

Try developing a comic story with your group. And don't forget to share your story with the Hand-In-Hand Network!

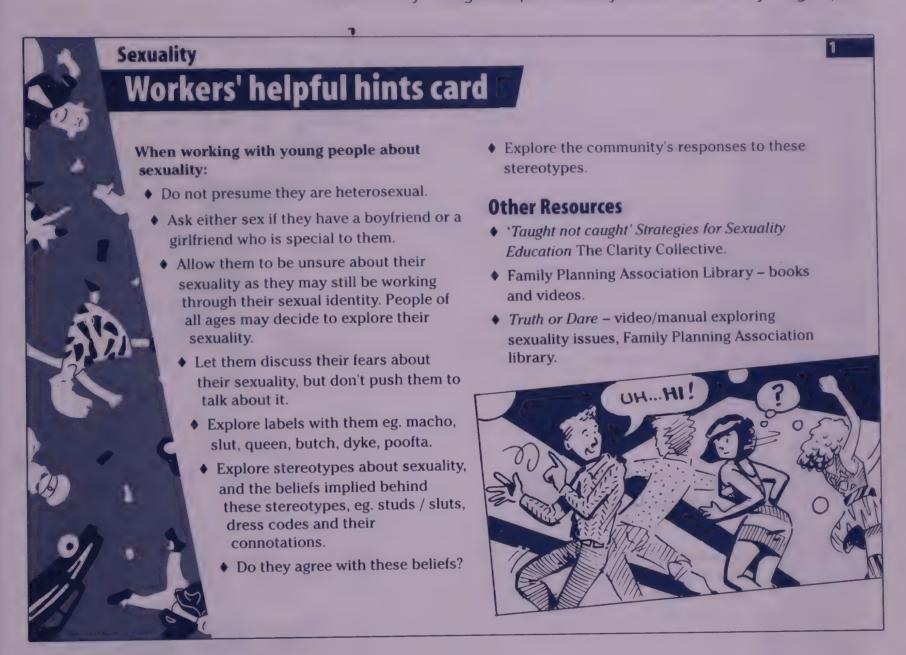

6. H. I. P. RESOURCE KIT

These cards can be used by a youth educator to stimulate discussion. They cover many different topics. They are made so that they can be easily carried and used in different locations.

Consider how you might adapt the activity cards for use with your group.

Sexuality

Story Scenarios

She feels sexually attracted to a boy she is on a date with...

He feels sexually attracted to another boy...

He wants to wear a pink shirt to a party but is worried what his friends would say...

She has had sex with one of the gang and is accused of being a slut...

He has a reputation of being a stud and is turned down by the girl he really likes...

He/She thinks he/she might be gay...

CONTACTS AND NETWORKING

n this section we have listed 300 organisations from all over the world who are concerned with socially apart youth. This information was taken from a database developed by the Hand-In-Hand Network that holds informations on more than 700 groups.

There was not enough space to print all the organisations in the database here in the resource pack, but you are encouraged to contact the Brazilian Center for the Defense of Rights of Children and Adolescents to get more information about groups in your country and region.

You can use the information in this section to:

- share the resources that your group has developed with others
- contact organisations with similar interests and activities to exchange information and ideas
- request materials described in the resources section that refer to groups listed here

HOW IS THE LIST ORGANISED?

By region as defined by the World Health Organization, and within each region the contacts are listed by country alphabetically. These regions are:

Africa Americas (North and South America) Eastern Mediterranean Europe Southeast Asia Western Pacific

To make the list easier to use, we have placed these six symbols next to the organisations where they apply:

- distributes materials listed in the resources section
- returned the questionnaire to the Hand-in-Hand Network
- has a specific programme in support of socially apart youth
- ☑ mainly established to work on HIV/AIDS
- has a resource centre
- operating internationally

THIS INFORMATION HAS COME FROM:

- questionnaires that some groups returned to the Hand-in-Hand Network
- participants at meetings and conferences who shared information and ideas
- information held at AHRTAG and the Brazilian Center for the Defense of the Rights of Children and Adolescents

Please help us keep this information up-to-date and useful by sending us the completed pull out questionnaire at the center of the Resource Pack, and telling us about your new activities and resources as well as about other groups you might know of. We are particullary interested in hearing from groups in developing countries.

The Hand-In-Hand Network promotes the exchange of information and educational experiences concerning the health and rights of socially apart youth. It is particularly concerned with sexual health and AIDS in developing countries. Individuals or groups with similar interests are encouraged to become involved in the network.

The Brazilian Center for the Defense of Rights of Children and Adolescents was formed in 1987 to advocate for the rights of socially apart youth in Brazil. It has pioneered STD and AIDS prevention strategies among street youth within the context of broader health issues. It is developing a resource centre and supporting the activities of the Hand-In-Hand Network.

AHRTAG is an international development NGO which supports the goal of health for all by promoting primary health care. It has a unique resource centre of primary health care materials, runs an information service, and produces practical newsletters, manuals, and publications. AHRTAG is working with SOS Crianca to develop its resource centre and the Hand-In-Hand Network.
